Presenting Cubist House, a marvel of Vancouver modernism nestled in the prestigious Southlands neighbourhood. Designed by architect Fred Dallalana, a protégé of Arthur Erickson, the home embodies a pivotal transition in the region's modern architectural trajectory. Its simple rectilinear forms and spacious internal volumes reflect Erickson's profound influence on a new generation of modernists. Stepping flat roofs and extensive panoramic glazing bathe its rooms in natural light, cultivating spaces of serenity and delight. Enclosed by a Japanese-inspired garden, the property offers a tranquil retreat, ideal for deep reflection amidst lush outdoor surroundings. Seamlessly bridging modern architectural tradition and natural connection, Cubist House awaits to inspire its next custodian.
